Dear Mr. Whidby,

I'm now 81, in impaired health, do not have time for the work I still want to do, so while I try to respond to all letters I can't^o in the detail people might perhaps like.

The most reasonable interpretation of the much-misrepresented official fact is that the rifle was in fact planted to be found but I do not believe that could have been as you suggest days before the assassination. ⁺To great a possibility of discovery.

So far as I am concerned the book/you mention are in varying degrees dishonest and undependable.

The first part of Lifton's book was published by others long before he wrote his saying that it is he who discovered sex and invented the wheel. The last part is absolutely impossible, fraud.

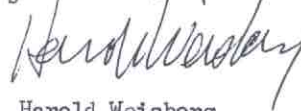

Livingstone cannot be regarded as rational and he is lost in his own imagination, which becomes real to him as soon as anything pops into his mind.

And he is paranoid. The world is out to get him.

In his aptly self-titled Killing the ⁺Truth what he says about me ranges from deliberate distortion to outright lies.

In my opinion, nothing such a man writes can be trusted.

Best wishes,

Harold Weisberg
